THEY WHO SMOKE

Pipes and tobacco, cigarettes and a smoking world! Where did men first learn to smoke and what benefit is derived by this great enterprise? The sacred scriptures date back four thousand years before Christ, yet it gives us no information as to the origin of smoking. Neither Abraham, Isaac nor Jacob smoked, and none of the old fathers there quests either pipe or cigarette. Job was a great man in the long ago, yet there is no evidence of his smoking. Moses was something of a sheik in his day, yet history is silent as to pipe or tobacco.

The tobacco plant is strictly a native of North America and the Indian smoked his pipe since no one knows when. Good old Sir Walter Raleigh carried a bale or less of tobacco back to England in 1588 and the English promoted the tobacco business throughout the world. The pipe was the pride of the savage; it was his solace in leisure hours and the emblem of his friendship. The story tellers have it as an Indian legend that the fathers first received the tobacco plant from an angel sent to earth by the Great Spirit. They smoked the leaves in their pipes that the angels might smell the fumes and be pleased.

The Indian, too, used the pipe and his tobacco as an oblation or offering to the Great Spirit. The Indian pipe of peace, passed to and fro in an assembly or conference, was a token of friendship and good will. Indian pipes used by old chiefs and on special occasions, were carved from stone and horn and burnt from clay, decorated and made beautiful, some with stems three to four feet long.

So since the days of Sir Walter Raleigh, I wonder how much civilization has improved on the old Indian pipe? Man cultivates the tobacco plant now; he builds factories to manufacture the leaves in many different forms. It is a great money maker today, for men with an eye for business have sold the scheme to millions and millions of subjects. The man high up in affairs smokes; the bare footed alley cast-off in all great cities smoke; a special car is provided on the Rail road, called "the smoker." The low, the high, the rich, the poor,—they smoke.

Smoking is generally conceded ot be a bad habit. It takes your money, is not conducive to improved health, and find me a man who smokes three or more boxes of cigarettes a day and invariably you find a man unduly nervous. General Grant died with cancer in his throat from being an inveterate smoker.

The day of the dear old clay or corncob pipe has passed; the day of the Indian and his decorated four foot embossed and beautiful pipe of friendship has gone. Now a new age brings on the cigar and the cigarette—plenty of poison to give taste and kick to the smoker.

Then to cap it all, lo and behold the idea of smoking captures the women, especially all foolish girls. They imitate the men; they can blow smoke from the mouth back through the nostrils just like an old sea captain.

A great business is that of smoking. It comes out of savagery, is promoted for money, and does no one any good. It vanishes in the air and leaves for effort and investment — only ashes.

part of the Mackenroth organization. The company has 12 veterans already engaged in a job training program, learning store management and merchandising.

Setting a new pattern in suburban area retail merchandising, this new store is classified as a "limited" department store. It will feature nationally recognized brands of merchandise and in those lines the company will be strongly represented with as extensive stocks as market conditions permit.

The Mackenroth Company store was planned and has been stocked, Mr. Mackenroth said, especially to suit the needs of the "active family" consumer group.

"In this family group," he pointed out, "everyone does something. Dad and the oldest boy fix up around the home, and they're hunters, golfers, fishermen or garden enthusiasts. They like brand name merchandise. Mother is a gardener too. Or she is an exacting housewife who wants only the best in her home furnishings and home working facilities. The youngsters are always active, and they use everything husky outdoors children like. This is the suburban "active family." They are always doing things and our experience has shown that they like to buy in a highly departmentalized store where all their particular favorite brand names can be found."

Following out Mr. Mackenroth's program, most of the better known brand names will be found on items carried in these 12 departments with which the store
